8:00 a.m., Monday, October 7 through 5 p.m., October 8, 2013

Lincoln University's Alan T. Busby Farm

A detailed, educational, hands-on, two-day seminar featuring:

Mr. Mark Kennedy
USDA-Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) State Grazing Lands Specialist

Dr. An Peischel
Tennessee State University Extension.

Dr. Dusty Walter
University of Missouri, Director of Natural Resources Management

This workshop is based on the California and Tennessee browsing academies. A number of topics will be covered including low stress livestock handling, brush ecology and management, nutrition, reproduction, herd health, timber management, fencing and business management. Attendees will receive hands-on training and gain advanced information on land enhancement using goats to control invasive vegetation.

The cost for the workshop is $75 per person. Preregistration with payment is required. Registration is limited to the first 20 participants. The registration fee covers the cost of many items that will be provided such as: meals, a flash drive containing a "Small Ruminant Toolbox," a goat management wheel, Famacha© training and card, and a noteboook that contains numerous reference materials.

The registration deadline is Tuesday, October 1, 2013. No walk-in registration.
